

Mary Davie has served 20+ years in the federal information technology community. During her career, Mary has supported DoD and civilian federal agencies worldwide in the acquisition of IT and professional services. She currently oversees the largest fee-for-service information technology (IT) procurement and services operation in the U.S. government managing more than 7,000 contracts, providing access to relevant and timely IT and telecommunications products, services, and solutions to defense and civilian agencies, as well as to state, local, and tribal governments. Prior experience includes leading assisted acquisition and marketing and business development operations.

Mary is currently working to connect the federal acquisition community in an effort to identify ways to innovate the federal acquisition process, increase efficiency and effectiveness, collaboration and transparency and to improve program and mission outcomes. Mary received FCW's Fed100 award in 2011 for these efforts.

Mary has also been involved in the Federal Strategic Sourcing Initiative which provides a platform for federal agencies to aggregate requirements for common goods and services and leverage the government's buying power. Mary received an FCW Fed 100 award for her leadership in strategic sourcing in 2007.

Mary has been involved with the American Council for Technology for a number of years, most recently serving as a Vice President at Large.
